LAKE KEZAR (LOVELL, MAINE)

Lake Kezar, among thy glorious hills you lay,
Like a rare, pure gem of Amethyst,
Flashing thy rainbow of colors
As the risen sun sinks in the West.
You, beauty of nature, with your sandy beaches,
Your gorgeous peninsulas, inlets and bays,
Designed by the great lover of nature,
Who can measure or gauge thy ways.
You, with your wonderful fountains,
Have drawn devout lovers around you,
With soft footed feet and loving voices,
Their songs of high praise surround you.
You have loved them in your soft, rippling waters,
You have cradled them close on your breast,
You have given the abundance of your storehouse
And your shores have given them rest.

How grandly your enduring mountains
Rise from your tree covered shores,
And your low lying hills abounding
With the treasured life we adore.

Sometimes on your shores we gather
At the end of a Sabbath day,
To sing praises and thank our Redeemer
For his love that lighted our way.

There are times when your loving murmurs
Call our sad, aching hearts to rest,
When the beauty of your rippling waters
Teach us that He knoweth best.

Lake Kezar, you are like a powerful magnet,
You draw our hearts to your side,
May you never lose your attractions
For beside you we love to abide.

Firemen's Drama and Dance

"Cappy Ricks" Was the Play. One of the Most Successful Entertainments This Year

The Norway Firemen's Benefit Relief Association staged another successful annual drama and dance at the Opera House, Thursday evening, Oct. 16. "Cappy Ricks" was the play, coached and directed by Harold A. Anderson with many of the leading local performers in the cast. The selection of a drama to suit all tastes was well made and "Cappy Ricks" proved to be a snappy comedy, with just a touch of seriousness and love scenes.

The title role, "Cappy" Alden Ricks, played by Dwight Kilgore, was neatly executed and a good portrayal of a farmer. The captain was a roarin' nor'easter in his office, but he loved a square fight and carried a warm glow in his heart between outbreaks of passion.

A dignified office clerk named Skinner was impersonated by Stanley March. He was "Cappy's" manager, advisor, peace-maker and target. Somewhat of the poor man shouldered his troubles with great fortitude and kept within the good graces of the explosive employer.

The cause of much disturbance was the captain's only daughter, Florence Ricks, played by Miss Madeline Hayden. A fat played by Miss Madeline Hayden. A fat played by Miss Madeline Hayden. A fat played by Miss Madeline Hayden.

A big distasteful chap was Matt Pansley, impersonated by Edwin Emerson. Leaving the fleet of ships owned by Cappy Ricks after a scene in the office, he met the daughter, who was heart in a hot Skimmer in every deal, he was not equal to the confusion in the "Goldie" mixup. Everything worked out nicely because he was the admiration of Ricks and captured the daughter.

A typist named Ellen Murray, was the role offered by Miss Evelyn Gilman. Being an ex-chorus girl with the stage name of "Goldie Blake" played her a most interesting part in the working machinery of the story and run a counter love plot with Cecil Bernhard.

Soft and effeminate was Cecil Pericles Bernhard, with a consumptive cough, played by Miss Madeline Hayden. A fat played by Miss Madeline Hayden. A fat played by Miss Madeline Hayden. A fat played by Miss Madeline Hayden.

After sitting around with chorus beauties he was sent into the office to learn the business. Ricks, disgusted with the human specimen delegated him to service on a fertilizer job. He found the type as well as his Goldie of the front lights. After some hardship the pair were united.

The real peacekeeper was Aunt Lucy, Ricks' sister, and his housekeeper. Lucy played this character in a most personated a dignified spinster of middle age with broad understanding and a mind of her own.

A lawyer named Singleton was a fit-in part played by H. A. Anderson. Specialties between the acts included a trumpet solo by Clarence Huff and a juvenile dancing number by two little girls, Marion Paradis and Miss Ruth, girls, Marion Paradis and Miss Ruth, girls, Marion Paradis and Miss Ruth.

EAST FRYEBURG

Oldest Citizen Dead

Our oldest citizen, Charlton H. Warren, passed away, Monday morning, Oct. 13. He has been in feeble health for several years. He was born Sept. 21, 1850, the son of Joshua Warren and always lived on the home farm. He was educated in the old yellow schoolhouse and also attended Bridgton High School. He was a member of the Congregational Church, also tax collector. In September, 1878 he married Sarah J., daughter of Calvin Hamden and one son, Wilton, lives at home. He also leaves one brother, William, who lives in the next house. He played clarinet in the band and did a great deal in building the hall now the Grange Hall, and was a charter member of East Fryeburg Grange. He was a very successful farmer and did some lumbering, having a water mill on the nearby brook. He built a fine residence which is named Mountain Aqua House for the fine spring in the basement. While he belonged to no particular church, he was a great student of the Bible and other religious books.

Funeral, Wednesday afternoon, was attended by Rev. John Duvall of Brookline, Mass., a personal friend. A choir composed of Rev. Duvall, A. O. Pike, H. Pike and Mrs. Lillian Pike, rendered "The Lord's Prayer" and "Nearer My God to Thee," very feelingly. There were many beautiful flowers. The bearers were W. R. Edmonds, Raymond H. Eastman, Wm. Autumn in Maine

One of Nature's Grandest Parades Just Passed

Much in the past few years has been written regarding the Autumn season in Maine. To most of the people in Maine little thought has been given to this special season but this year more than usual has been written of the autumn days, because of their unusual beauty and extreme warm weather.

Never have we had a more beautiful spectacle of the changing colors than this year and tourists have taken advantage of the wonderful warm fall days and Maine's thoroughfares have been filled with one of state people to visit and view the annual fall colorings.

From early in September to the middle of October one can find nowhere a more beautiful place to visit than the summer country with its thousands of wooded hills, mountains, and mirrored lakes and rivers. Each part of the day has its own color of beauty topped by the most beautiful sunset and followed by cool moonlit evenings of exquisite beauty.

To the Maine State the vacation season in years past closed at Labor Day, but to him the last part of the season is just ahead, when all nature is at its best in its vivid colorings and in these days of good roads and autos, people from all over are beginning to enjoy the fall season in Maine as well as the summer months. Over the week end of October 12th there was the heaviest traffic on the roads of any previous week. It was stated that the Crowding of the roads was a record-breaking crowd there for the day and roads to and from were crowded.

A short time ago a woman who has traveled during the greater part of her life, upon the Maine coasters, says that she has never seen such marvelous views. She traveled over the coasters as seen from some of our billboards. It pained her to think that Maine was not crowded with people to see them also.

Some of the most interesting automobile rides are those which are off the main traveled highways. They meander through the woods where there are spots which are actually so splendidly painted by nature that the riders stop their cars to gaze in wonder and admiration.

The hotel men find that from year to year the tourists come to Maine in September and October in increasing numbers. This year, in particular, the weather has been remarkably fine. Probably not for years has Autumn in this State been so wonderful.

Always leave at least an inch of the stem ends on boots when cooking them so as to prevent "bleeding," or having the color run out. The skins are left on for the same reason. To peel cooked beets quickly drop them for a moment into cold water and the skin and stem can be slipped off. Serve hot, sliced or diced, with butter, salt and pepper.

Boyhood Days Reviewed

By Don C. Seitz from the Christian Leader of Sept. 13

The writer spent the formative period of his life in Norway. Graduating from the high school and claims Norway as his home. The present owner of this paper was a student here, and when he was a boy the Norway Advertiser almost fifty years ago—Editor.

My story remarks in a recent Leader concerning the University church at Attica, Ohio, written across six decades, seem to have stirred considerable interest and to have raised an architectural question. I saw the new church in 1913, when father and I journeyed to Seneca County to attend a reunion of our tribe at Bloomville. Our kinsman, John H. Spiller, of the latter hamlet, ran us over to Attica, where we met a few survivors of our day and took a look at the church. My eyes may have deceived me, but I carried away a distinct remembrance of an ornate metal front, that was displaced after a year for the vandalism of the old red brick.

Dr. Spicer, in his corrective letter, intimates that I had left behind a memory of being "a lively boy." I may have been so, but I was not conscious of it. Yet some things recur that may have given such an impression. Attica was, and is, a little town. I think it numbered three hundred in population when we arrived there by wagon from Adrian in 1888. It had a Main Street, a four mill run by the Meador family, and a little I. O. O. F. hall. I earned my first and second dollar. One day I happened to look up at the roof and discovered about six square feet of it in flame. No fire department, but my quick alarm set all hands at work and the shop was saved. I was a hero for a few minutes.

Father subscribed for the adorable Young Folks Magazine published in far-off Boston, at the time when Thomas Bailey Aldrich's "Story of a Bad Boy" was running, and I fear it influenced my conduct, because later at the time of a snow fort that made some trouble and brought on a fight (two to one, which I won) and established certain other notions in my head which are still with me. I have never been able to distinguish from my vision the pathetic picture of Bimby Wallace drifting out to sea in an oceanic boat, never to return.

The thing happened afterwards to Leslie A. Lee's son, on Merryment Bay, near Brunswick, Maine, where the Androscoggin and the Kennebec Rivers meet together. I did not regard Tom Bailey as a Bad Boy, but as one of the right sort. Of course we had no Rivermouth or Sailor Boys—only the tiny, muddy and pond and Honey Creek also muddy and shallow, but with its banks abounding in glorious walnut trees, heavily laden. There, too, were tall hickory trees that shivered huge willows when the frost came, and among which red, gray, white and black squirrels lived in extravagant luxury. The boys, on the whole, were not like Tom, but found their counterparts long afterwards in reading William Dean Howells' "Boys' Town". That told the story to a dot. We all resembled his crowd.

In town there were the three Ernest boys, sons of a German father and Virginian mother, who was "copperhead" during the war and not afraid to show it. The father was well-to-do. He lived in a big brick (not sheet-iron) house in which there stood a sideboard, the only one in Attica. On it rested a decanter, and the decanter was filled with wine! This fact about and about to local hostility. Not that the town was dry. By no means. Its sole saloon did open business and always had six barrels, with "Old Monongahelt" burned in their heads, lying in front of the windows, through which the bartender could be seen mixing drinks by throwing them in rainbow curves over his head, from one big glass to another. No, the kids were best, kings, dukes and lords drank wine. This put Mr. Ernest among the aristocrats. The rest of the community was democratic and believed in democracy in beverages such as rye and bourbon were esteemed to be.

There was one big store, kept by Rinninger & Silcox. Rinninger was a capitalist, who hailed, I think, from Sandusky. Silcox kept the store and was the best of the citizens. He had two nice daughters and was a leading factor in his church. We were invited there to dine one evening, when I ruined my social prospects by spilling a cup of hot tea in my lap, right before the girls, who, however, were too well bred to titter.

As a reflex of the "Bad Boy", I recall standing before the village justice of the peace who interfered in a castigation I had been giving a very nice little boy, and telling him that if he did not take a hand on me I would knock his head off—and fully intending to do it. If he ever told father, that noble gentleman never mentioned it.

The church choir became ambitions under the lead of a new dentist named Harmon, who had come to town, and was musical. It had consisted mainly of two sisters named Crow, who were esteemed by the newcomers to resemble too much those of their dark-feathered namesakes, and trouble followed, with Harmon victor. He celebrated by putting on the can'ta of "Esther, the Beautiful Queen". The show took several nights. I was allowed to attend until the night when Harmon was to be hanged. Eager to witness the execution, I bitterly resented being compelled to stay at home. What was worse, Harry Neely, son of the town harness-maker, who had a soft-soprano voice, dressed in red-tinted night-clothes, was page-boy to King Ahasuerus, and besides the glow of a place in the east, was present when Harmon was hanged. In a combination of envy and revenge I met him the next day and punched his head good and plenty. He told his mother, who told father. His reply was that he let me fight my own battles—pretty good policy for all fathers.

The three Ernest boys, Charles, Harry and George, were my inseparable companions. We were always together and shared the ownership of a tame woodchuck. Charles clerked for a time for Silcox. One of his duties at the close of each day was to take a water sprinkler and add many mounds of moisture to a great heap of dried apples in the store loft. Each day saw the gathering of a new layer which we properly refreshed. They were sent to New York. John sold them by weight.

I met my first shower-bath at Attica. L. Crow, a brother of the singing sisters, had been a home guard over Confederate prisoners at Johnson's Island in Lake Erie. Here he discovered the shower. Coming home, he set up a nail-peg with a big plug in the bottom over a milk pan punched with nail holes on the back of the barn. The keg was filled with water and a cord hitched to the plug. A yank released the shower. The water fell about ten feet. It was enough. By the way, "L." before "Crow" in the soldier's name did not stand for anything. He was just "L", remember that the eldest of the celebrated Gammon brothers was "N" and nothing more.

My Sunday school teacher was Mrs. Annie Myers, wife of Dr. J. C. Myers, the local doctor. Both were delightful people. She gave me my first Christmas present—a jackknife. That very evening, after the "tree" I experimented with it and cut a gash in my thumb which left a scar yet visible.

Much of the trade with farm folks was by barter. One old lady with a German name traded in her butter, invariably securing a handful of well-washed pebbles within the pots. Some storekeepers would have complained. John did not. He had the stones abstracted, washed, and returned to the dame in her tea and coffee, thus coming out far ahead.

The local fondness was a fascinating place. Being remote from the railway, activities within the pots. Some storekeepers would have complained. John did not. He had the stones abstracted, washed, and returned to the dame in her tea and coffee, thus coming out far ahead.

Speaking of badness, I remember when Harry Ernest, shooting at a cat, peppered Fritz, Keller's legs with birdshot, and all of us three went on the fence and wondered when they were going to make up a fight (two to one, which I won) and established certain other notions in my head which are still with me. I have never been able to distinguish from my vision the pathetic picture of Bimby Wallace drifting out to sea in an oceanic boat, never to return.

We were invited there to dine one evening, when I ruined my social prospects by spilling a cup of hot tea in my lap, right before the girls, who, however, were too well bred to titter.

As a reflex of the "Bad Boy", I recall standing before the village justice of the peace who interfered in a castigation I had been giving a very nice little boy, and telling him that if he did not take a hand on me I would knock his head off—and fully intending to do it. If he ever told father, that noble gentleman never mentioned it.

The church choir became ambitions under the lead of a new dentist named Harmon, who had come to town, and was musical. It had consisted mainly of two sisters named Crow, who were esteemed by the newcomers to resemble too much those of their dark-feathered namesakes, and trouble followed, with Harmon victor. He celebrated by putting on the can'ta of "Esther, the Beautiful Queen". The show took several nights. I was allowed to attend until the night when Harmon was to be hanged. Eager to witness the execution, I bitterly resented being compelled to stay at home. What was worse, Harry Neely, son of the town harness-maker, who had a soft-soprano voice, dressed in red-tinted night-clothes, was page-boy to King Ahasuerus, and besides the glow of a place in the east, was present when Harmon was hanged. In a combination of envy and revenge I met him the next day and punched his head good and plenty. He told his mother, who told father. His reply was that he let me fight my own battles—pretty good policy for all fathers.

The three Ernest boys, Charles, Harry and George, were my inseparable companions. We were always together and shared the ownership of a tame woodchuck. Charles clerked for a time for Silcox. One of his duties at the close of each day was to take a water sprinkler and add many mounds of moisture to a great heap of dried apples in the store loft. Each day saw the gathering of a new layer which we properly refreshed. They were sent to New York. John sold them by weight.

I met my first shower-bath at Attica. L. Crow, a brother of the singing sisters, had been a home guard over Confederate prisoners at Johnson's Island in Lake Erie. Here he discovered the shower. Coming home, he set up a nail-peg with a big plug in the bottom over a milk pan punched with nail holes on the back of the barn. The keg was filled with water and a cord hitched to the plug. A yank released the shower. The water fell about ten feet. It was enough. By the way, "L." before "Crow" in the soldier's name did not stand for anything. He was just "L", remember that the eldest of the celebrated Gammon brothers was "N" and nothing more.

My Sunday school teacher was Mrs. Annie Myers, wife of Dr. J. C. Myers, the local doctor. Both were delightful people. She gave me my first Christmas present—a jackknife. That very even-

Bridge Bonds

Oxford County Will Issue $200,000 Bonds

Oxford County will issue $200,000 in four per cent bonds to pay for bridge construction under the amendment of the so called bridge act in 1915. This is the first time since building the Rumford court house some eighteen years ago that the county has borrowed on a bond issue. At that time $25,000 was raised.

Several important bridges have been constructed in this county in the last few years notably the Bethel bridge across the Androscoggin, the Fryeburg bridge and lastly the famous Chisholm Park Bridge completed the past summer at a cost of $300,00.

On this Rumford bridge the county's part was $87,000 while $23,670 was the county's part on Canal Bridge at Fryeburg and $15,750 on Toll Bridge, also in Fryeburg.

Oxford County's $200,000 issue is being advertised for bids, and delivering the bonds will begin next month. The bonds will be sold at a public sale and South Paris bridge over the Little Androscoggin, the new cement bridge at West Paris, the bridge between South and West Paris, bridges at Hiram, several small bridges in Bethel, one at Andover, the Mexico-Peru bridge and several others.

A. G. Staples in one of his recent articles says: About nine-tenths of this present-day hurry is worse than needless. When I see a person always in a hurry around the shop, I suspect that he is not a good manager. When I see a workman who is always rushing around, I suspect that his methods are aimless. When I see a man driving around in a car, passing people on hills, and generally burning up the road, I know that he is no adept at the art of the question, "What's the Rush?" When I see another sort of driver—one of these collegiates with a pack of golf-bags in the rumble seat making sixty an hour I know that as a rule he is going nowhere and doing nothing, that could not be done at a slower rate of speed. He is a menace to society, as a rule.

Frank Latulip Dead—Barriaults to Move—Curtis Visited in Augusta.

Frank Latulip, for many years a resident of Otisfield, aged 76 years, passed away Monday, Oct. 13th, at the home of his son, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Latulip. Mr. Latulip has been in poor health for several years and suffered an ill turn a week before from which he did not rally. Everything was done for his comfort and he was given the best of care, but since the death of his wife, last May, has not been as well.

Mr. Latulip was born in Montreal, Can., and married Miss Mary Ann Latulip of this town. He is survived by a son, Elmer, with whom he lived; a daughter, Mrs. Nellie Thym and two grandchildren, Milton and Eugene. Another good father, neighbor and friend has left the community to mourn their loss. Mr. Latulip was in his earlier years, a very fine marble and stone cutter and made several beautiful memorial monuments for persons in town.

Funeral services were held at the Bolster's Mills Methodist church, Wednesday, at 1 o'clock, officiated by Rev. Andrew Young of Harrison, with A. F. The Rise of Tom Hadley

By C. R. Whitman
A Chapter XXII
A Financial Project
Thanksgiving at the Hadleys

Tom one day called Charley to the express office for a consultation and asked him how he would like to have a share in the future of the business. Charley said that the idea pleased him very much, as he was getting tired of being a clerk and had more than a clerk in the bank, and that nothing had satisfied him so well as the clothing business which they had pulled off together.

"But what is the scheme, old man?" Charley inquired.
Tom: "It is the formation of a trust company, or something of that nature. It will have to be incorporated by the General Court next winter. Father has been a member of it and he will know just how to proceed. We shall want him and Mr. Benton with Lawyer Whiting and Justices Randolph and Adams with us, for giving us the general management of it after we get started, with our fathers as chief counselors and our own as the brains of the business. We shall need a place of our own, of course, near the center of business. This is the general idea. I haven't considered the matter sufficiently yet to determine whether it is practicable and would be of any benefit to us, but the first step is to see whether you would go into it with me. For unless you favor it, it would be useless for me alone, if inclined, which I am not, to do anything about it, even if it should be found to be feasible."

Charley: "Nothing would please me better, Tom, but where is the money to start with, coming from? I have only about $1,000 in the bank, and haven't tried to save anything. We need the money only of having a good time and spending money freely. Now, I guess, for Betty's sake and my own, I'd better begin to change my tactics and save what I can for emergencies."

Tom: "That's the stuff, Charley. I've about the same amount of money in the bank that you have. But the scheme won't cost us much to start in with, and if the others will take stock in it, it will give us a working capital to begin on. Probably your father would buy a lot with the building on it and hold it in his name till we could pay him for it. We could put some of our money there and remodeling the building for our own use and the increased value of the property would be ample security for the money your father would lend us. I would like to think over these things very carefully and study stock market reports and shall devote all my evenings not occupied, to its consideration, and if I come to the conclusion that the project is practicable and desirable for us, I'll see what Mr. Benton says, and if he approves, I'll talk the matter over with father when Bessie and I go home at Thanksgiving time and ascertain whether he'll take hold of it."

Charley: "How many evenings a week do you think you'll have to consider the project?"

Tom: "Oh, about three. The rest of the evenings of the week will be occupied with our rehearsals, dance parties, and other matters."

Charley: "Don't! That may be all right for you, old man, but I can't get along with so very little time with Betty, as you plan to with Maude."

Tom: "Well, you won't have to. The consideration of this thing will be my affair to begin with, but keep your mouth shut and your coat on, old chap, for if the scheme should now get noised abroad it would risk the beans, do you understand?"

Charley: "You bet I do, Tom, but keep me informed from time to time how the matter appears to you, as I shall be mighty anxious."

While Charley generally could keep his mouth shut to Tom's entire satisfaction, in this matter he couldn't keep it closed to Betty and he must needs tell her what Tom had in mind, and she, in turn, told her business for themselves, if the plan proved to be feasible, and met with their fathers' approval.

Betty: "It will go all right, Charley, for what Tom starts is sure to succeed. Everybody says so, and how glad I shall be when you and he are in business for yourselves and have a place of your own."

Charley: "And I will, Betty, for that will be the making of us both."

Betty: "Yes indeed it will, but does Tom always want you with him in his schemes?"

Charley: "Of course he does. He says that he could never do anything alone and wants me to assist him in carrying out his plans. He couldn't have caught the bugles, recovered the stolen bonds, or pulled off the mark down sale without me. He said so. We work well together and make a mighty good team. Father calls us his steersman."

Betty: "Oh, Charley, I'm very glad that you and Tom work so well together. You'll be the smartest young men in all this region, by and by, and Maude and I are going to help."

Charley, teasingly: "What in time could you two do, I'd like to know?"

Betty, proudly: "We have money of our own, at least I have—and didn't we help out at the mark down sale?"

Charley: "Of course you did, and are mighty smart too, but I won't have you put money into any scheme of Tom's and mine."

Betty, sarcastically: "Bosh, Charley, you are not my guardian."

Charley, confidently: "No, Betty dear, not quite yet, but pretty soon, though."

Betty: "Perhaps. There is many a slip."

Charley, interrupting: "No slip in this case, Betty."

Betty: "I don't believe Tom can keep away from Maude now so much as he imagines. Do you Charley?"

Charley: "Why, of course not. The person would be more attentive. How would you like such a lover as Tom pretends he is?"

Betty: "Oh, I'd warm him up some, I guess—and they laughed."

Charley: "I guess you would, Betty, all right—and both laughed again."

Tom soon found that the practicability of his project depended, not so much upon his study of the foundations of trust companies and the intricacies of stock markets as the cooperation of the men he had named as members of the association, and he went to consult Mr. Benton respecting the new scheme. After briefly outlining his project, as he had to Charley, Tom said: "Do you think it feasible, Mr. Benton?"

Mr. Benton: "Of course it is, my boy, if you can get those you have mentioned interested in it and learn when and what to buy of securities. You say you and Bessie are going home to spend Thanksgiving day? You had better talk with your father and see what encouragement you get from him. I'll talk the matter over with Cy and Randolph and see how they feel about it." (Tom knew that they would feel precisely as Mr. Benton did, and that Mr. Benton, always careful and cautious, would not have said so much if the scheme had not interested him, and he concluded that the whole thing depended upon the interest his father took in it.)

The great man added: "I see that you want to get to be independent, as soon as possible. I think you have done pretty well since you came among us. I imagine you want to get a fine home for Maude in a very short time. Am I right?"

Tom: "Certainly, sir. She has a splendid home now and I wouldn't want her to give it up for a poor one with me."

Mr. Benton: "That is all very praiseworthy, my boy, but did it never occur to you that she might always stay with us and have you with her?"

Tom: "No indeed! I hadn't thought so far with her as to talk about a home for us. I thought you and Charley's mother would want him to live with you and I don't desire that I or mine shall be a burden to Maude's parents."

Mr. Benton: "You won't be, my boy. You will work into my business in a way to help me and in accordance with my plans and wishes. Charley is different. He will work with you, when he wouldn't with me at all. He and Betty will be with me at all times. Maude, Betty will manage him. We need Maude and you with us, so don't fret about becoming independent too fast. Be slow and cautious in all matters. Let us see what the business men take their course with Maude and when she is ready for it, get married. See what your father says about the trust company, then come to me."

Tom: "Oh, Mr. Benton! Do you know what this means to be steered into the most desirable things, a young man like me could possibly hope for?"

Mr. Benton: "I think I do, my boy, and don't be too anxious to bring things to your liking too fast. See that what you do is performed as you have so far done, thoroughly and well. Don't allow your interest to swerve you from this course."

Tom: "I won't, sir. That is the good advice I shall endeavor to follow it."

Tom went home that day and Bessie would be with them on Thanksgiving day and also of his engagement to Maude and his mother had replied that they would be very glad to have their children with them on that occasion. Mr. Tom said: "And I shall be glad too, for them to see what a splendid daughter they are to have."

Mr. Tom: "Oh, they will be disappointed, I am sure, but I'd like to see them just the same."

Tom: "Wait and see, dear. Father is not over demonstrative, but mother will give us a working capital to begin on. Probably your father would buy a lot with the building on it and hold it in his name till we could pay him for it. We could put some of our money there and remodeling the building for our own use and the increased value of the property would be ample security for the money your father would lend us. Party Enjoyed Motor Trip—Abbotts Visited in Massachusetts—Repairs on Grange Hall—Grange Program.

Stanton Lamb of Bethel is with Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Merrill and is attending school in the primary room.

Miss Annie Burnham and her friend, Miss Ellen Chase of Falmouth were callers of Mrs. Martha P. Perry on Thursday. Miss Burnham is a niece of Mrs. Perry.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Merrill Stanton Lamb, Mrs. Horace Skinner, Mildred Haynes and Mildred Clough went to Crawford and Franconia Notches on Sunday, Oct. 12th. Owing to road construction on various roads they arrived home too late for Mildred to return to Portland with her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Warren, on Sunday, Monday night Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Merrill took Mildred, her mother, Mrs. Harry N. Haynes, Mrs. Ralph Stevens and daughter, Margaret, to Portland. Mrs. Stewart and daughter returned to their home in West Medford, Mass. from Portland by train.

Harry N. Haynes is suffering from ivy poisoning of his arm and hand. L. W. W. Abbott has been more comfortable. Some days he can eat his meals bolstered up. Other days he has not the strength to attempt these slight changes.

Tom soon found that the practicability of his project depended, not so much upon his study of the foundations of trust companies and the intricacies of stock markets as the cooperation of the men he had named as members of the association, and he went to consult Mr. Benton respecting the new scheme. After briefly outlining his project, as he had to Charley, Tom said: "Do you think it feasible, Mr. Benton?"

Mr. Benton: "Of course it is, my boy, if you can get those you have mentioned interested in it and learn when and what to buy of securities. You say you and Bessie are going home to spend Thanksgiving day? You had better talk with your father and see what encouragement you get from him. I'll talk the matter over with Cy and Randolph and see how they feel about it." (Tom knew that they would feel precisely as Mr. Benton did, and that Mr. Benton, always careful and cautious, would not have said so much if the scheme had not interested him, and he concluded that the whole thing depended upon the interest his father took in it.)

WEST PARIS FRUIT SURVEY
STARTED

Fruit growers from the town of Paris, Sumner, Woodstock and Greenwood initiated a marketing survey, the first in the state, Tuesday evening, at the Community Hall, West Paris. The survey was conducted by the newly formed Fruit Contact Committee, headed by W. J. Ricker of Turner, Irving Andrews of South Paris and Fred Sturtevant of Augusta.

Speaking of the real need of better marketing methods and facilities, Mr. Ricker stressed the necessity of a fact finding survey as the first step. Orchardists familiar with the situation note this development as the outgrowth of their meeting last spring at Farm and Home week, Orono, when C. S. Wilson, member of the Federal Farm Board, explained to them how they could cooperate to secure the benefits of the Agriculture Marketing Act. A "Contact Committee" was then formed to represent the growers, consisting of:

W. J. Ricker, chairman, Turner.
C. S. Wilson, Greenwood.
Fred Sturtevant, Augusta.
Irving Andrews, South Paris.
W. H. Conant, Buckfield.
E. H. Hobbs, Hopedale.
R. A. Sander, Lewiston.

E. H. Hobbs, Hopedale.
R. A. Sander, Lewiston.

R. A. Sander, Lewiston.

This committee arranged a meeting of fruit growers held at Highmore, June 14. About 150 growers from all over the state met and discussed the question of cooperative apple marketing in Maine. Among the speakers were Ralph Ross, fruit and vegetable representative of the Farm Board in the Northeastern states, Commissioner of Agriculture, Frank P. Washburn, and A. L. Deering, Assistant Director of the Extension Service, Orono. The decision finally reached was that a careful and painstaking survey of apple marketing conditions in Maine should precede any attempt to form cooperative associations. The discussion brought out that the production of certain varieties, notably the McIntosh, was well adapted to Maine and that this variety could compete favorably with quality fruit from other commercial areas; but that growers in other areas were increasing the quantity and quality of their production and that some concerted action on the part of Maine growers was necessary to preserve and expand their own market outlets.

Mr. Ricker listed the benefits to growers from cooperative packing and marketing, as:—Furnishes adequate packing facilities to put out a pack to meet the requirements by law; standardizes and unifies the pack; relieves the growers of the worry and labor of packing; gives the small grower the same advantage now enjoyed by all the large growers through bargaining ability and the greater facilities afforded; disposal of cull fruit in carlot shipments, such as cull stock, and, last, it concentrates the volume of fruit of like varieties and grades which will have a greater market value.

The West Paris growers applied for a survey to determine if they had a sufficient volume of the right varieties, number of trees, age of trees, equipment, and other pertinent information. Mr. Ricker, County Agent, and Mr. Alden, Extension Marketing Specialist, Orono, assisted in making the survey. The results will be published probably next month.

EGG RECORD PROJECT FOR 1931
Where does the Oxford County Farmer stand when it comes to hens? What production do you get from your flocks? What methods are best?

These are some of the questions which will be answered by the poultry project "Egg Records". The purpose of the egg-record project is to assist poultry keepers to determine the egg production of their flocks and study it in comparison with other flocks in the county. Co-operators will keep an egg record on blanks furnished by the Extension Service and report to the Farm Bureau office each month the number of eggs laid and the number of hens on hand on the first day of the month. These reports will be tabulated in the County Agent's office and a statement sent to each cooperator showing the average egg production for each cooperator for the month.

This is available to every farmer, and we urge every farmer who has a flock of hens to write the County Agent at South Paris, asking to be enrolled in the project which will begin November 1, 1930 reports show the following:

Hens per flock	Av. Eggs per Bird
November	164.8
December	182.0
January	157.2
February	145.9
March	149.5
April	142.9
May	138.8
June	129.1
July	121.1
August	121.1

MILK QUALITY MEETINGS
